

2025

Academy Report

Executive Summary

American Academy of Religion 2025

2025 was filled with challenges and opportunities. Amidst escalating threats to religion departments and institutions of higher learning, the American Academy of Religion defended our disciplines and our colleagues. Amidst rapidly declining financial support for the humanities and the academic study of religion and theology, our members rallied: providing resources for scholars and departments, contributing financially, serving as volunteer leaders and contributing their knowledge and expertise in AAR governance, committees, and programming. Whether convening online for webinars, mentoring, the June Annual Meeting, or joining the November Annual Meeting in Boston, AAR members consistently demonstrated the importance of expertise and the value of sharing our work, engaging critical conversations, and supporting each other.

In the face of a changing professional field, in and outside the academy, AAR seeks to remain nimble and invested in learning and teaching and developing diverse and meaningful resources for our members. Thank you for being part of our professional association as we collectively strive to uphold and defend the value of religious studies and theology.

OUR MEMBERSHIP

As we continue to expand our year-round programming, we have surpassed 6,000 members in 2025. As a membership organization, all we do is by and for our members.

BY THE NUMBERS

AAR members are the lifeblood of our professional association: Program Units and Seminars are in charge of annual programming; standing committees advocate for constituencies, promote important aspects of our work, engage in self governance and ensure professional conduct; juries evaluate grants and awards nominations; task forces tackle special issues.

6,226

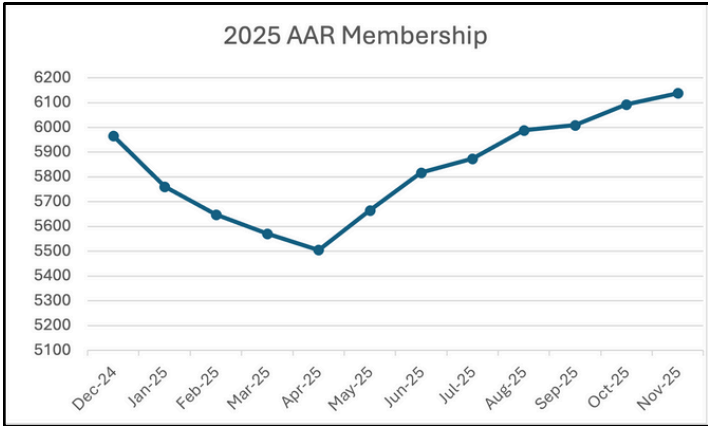

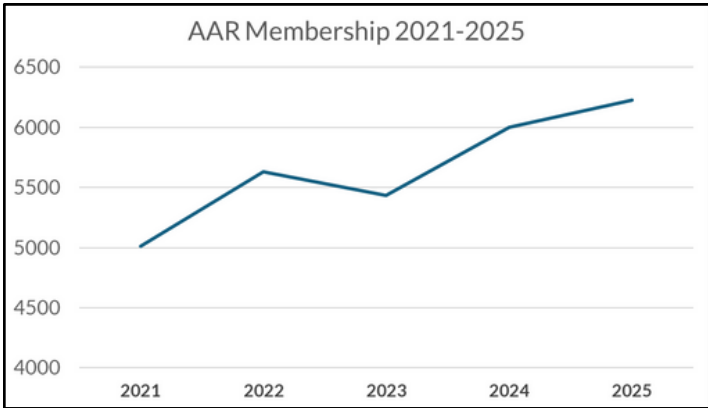

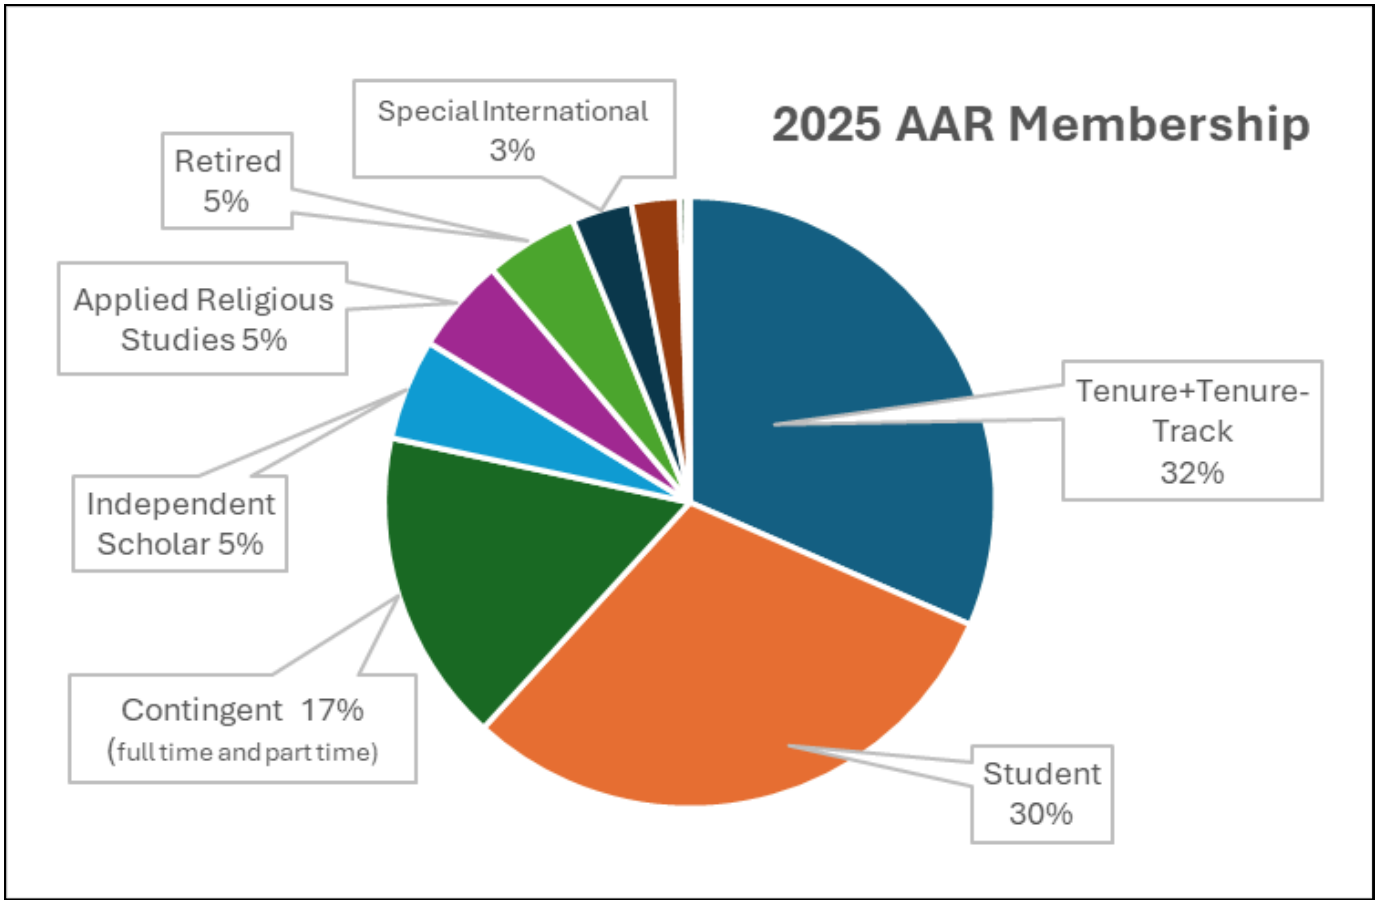

number of AAR members in good standing in November 2025

1,320

number of members who serve on Program Unit Steering Committees or serve as co-chairs of Program Units or Seminars number of members who volunteer by serving on AAR committees, juries, and task forces.

193

Episcopal Divinity School
Georgia State University
Princeton University
Springtide Research Institute
Stanford University
The University of Pennsylvania
Turner Theological Seminary

OUR ADVOCACY

Our advocacy this year focused on mobilizing our members and scholar activists to organize against the attacks on academic freedom and to defend our academic departments.

AAR continues to promote the value of religious studies and theology and to advocate for scholars and practitioners.

BY THE NUMBERS

In addition to launching a new advocacy section of our website and expanding our programming to cover topics relevant to current events, we also launched an advocacy newsletter with a higher average open rate than that of all our newsletters combined.

4,269

number of total views of our advocacy-centered webinAARs

451

THE YEAR IN ADVOCACY

MARCH 2025

AAR launches new website and adds a new “Religious Studies Matters” section focused on engaged and public scholarship as well as advocacy

MARCH - APRIL 2025

AAR endorses several letters penned by scholarly societies speaking out against actions taken by the U.S. government to suppress free speech and academic freedom

APRIL 2025

AAR launches a regular advocacy newsletter, issues a board statement “Denouncing Book Bans and Threats to Academic Freedom,” and hosts a webinAAR featuring member authors whose books were banned by the US Naval Academy

AUGUST 2025

AAR pens letter to the leaders at University of Oregon urging the university to retain the religion department.

SEPTEMBER 2025

AAR launches Fall Fridays Scholarship Series, a webinAAR series on topics including Religion & Human Rights; Religion, Race & Public Scholarship; Religion & Conflict: Case Studies from Ukraine; and Theology after Gaza. Additionally, monthly webinars by the Academic Relations Committee continue to consistently support and advocate for REL departments.

NOVEMBER 2025

Annual Meeting presidential panel focuses on threats to REL departments and faculty; AAR also hosts emergency session on immigration enforcement activities in sanctuary spaces, issues board statement.

OUR FUNDRAISING

We could not exist without our members' support. From volunteering their time in leadership positions, to donating what they can to help scholars in need or to support award and grant programs, our collective work is supported by members' boundless generosity.

BY THE NUMBERS

The centerpiece of our fundraising efforts this year was our matching “Religious Studies Matters” Fall Fundraising Campaign in which we raised a total of $49,000. Thank you to our matchmakers! Total donations to AAR in 2025 were $63,372 with additional $1,700 to the “One Tree Planted” Fund.

OUR PUBLICATIONS

In 2025, the Journal of the American Academy of Religion editors worked tirelessly to get the journal caught up with backlogged issues and we are now starting 2026 with the publication of Volume 94, Issue 1.

BY THE NUMBERS

In addition to the data on the right, 2025 also saw Religious Studies News implement a new content creation strategy and we published more articles in 2025 than in 2024, 2023, and 2022 combined. Reading Religion also expanded its coverage to review films including Sinners and KPop Demon Hunters.

“Editor’s Note”

By Andrea R Jain

Journal of the American Academy of Religion,*
Volume 93, Issue 1, March 2025, Pages 1–3

Published: 17 April 2025

“One day when my children were still smaller than me, I walked into our dining room to find them standing proudly, delightfully defiant grins across their faces. There had been a glitter explosion, and it was everywhere. As I recall it was a year or more before I no longer found sparks of glitter gleaming from floorboards and tucked into corners of picture frames. The image of my children surrounded by glitter leapt to mind when I opened The New York Times to see a list of delightful words strewn below the headline: “These Words Are Disappearing in the New Trump Administration” (Yourish et al. 2025). Word glitter, followed by a dire reminder of Trump’s empire-making project.”

“We are writing to notify you of a looming threat to religious studies, the humanities, and tenure protections at the University of Oregon (UO). We are members of UO’s Department of Religious Studies, which is home to seven associate and full professors. Our department has served a critical role within humanities education here at UO since 1939, and in recent years has been thriving, with new faculty hires, robust course enrollments, and a steady stream of research grants, awards, and publications.”

“Theology Meets Southern Gothic Horror in Ryan Coogler’s “Sinners”

By Amber Lowe

Published: 2 May 2025

“Ryan Coogler’s Sinners is more than a cinematic milestone –it is a love letter to Black Southern culture, a theological interrogation of sin, and a speculative reckoning with colonial memory. Set in 1932 Mississippi, this Southern Gothic vampire tale fuses blues music, non-linear storytelling, and parasitic horror to interrogate the lingering afterlife of extraction, racial capitalism, and spiritual dispossession.”

OUR PROGRAMS

AAR is more than the June and November Annual Meetings; we also provide year-round programming through frequent webinAARs, mentoring programs, and online scholarship opportunities. AAR supports competitive award and grant programs that recognize and support excellence in the field of religious studies.

BY THE NUMBERS

1,832

number of individual registrations to our webinAARs this year

7,791

total number (incl. SBL) of registrations to the November Annual Meeting

8,667

total number of views across our webinAARs offered this year

335

total number of registrations to the Online June Sessions

2,073

number of views on our most watched webinAAR

175

total number of applications to our various mentoring programs

WHAT OUR MENTEES SAID

“It was immensely helpful to humanize the scholarly journey and to address questions to someone knowledgeable about the transition from being doctoral students writing a dissertation to being young scholars sorting out why and how to publish our research as a scholarly book project. The program made the whole process seem less daunting and more friendly / accessible.”

Mentee, Publishing Mentoring Program

“I enjoyed learning from people who were able to continue researching and making a difference, and I was able to have a new form of imagination of what my career could look like. I really appreciate the different types of jobs people can have post-PhD.”

Mentee, Applied Religious Studies Mentorship Cohort

MOST ATTENDED WEBINAAR

Government Book Bans in America: A Conversation with Recently Banned AAR Member Authors

The banner features the webinAAR logo (continuing the conversation) and text indicating it is sponsored by AAR's Committee on the Public Understanding of Religion. It lists five speakers: Anthea Butler, Michael Eric Dyson, Robert P. Jones, Bryan Massingale, and Jim Wallis.

In this webinAAR, several AAR member authors of books banned by the US Naval Academy discussed the dangers of the book banning and related efforts to censor, restrict, and control what students and the public can read, learn, and know.

AWARD AND GRANTS

Our grants provide funding to our members for travel, research, public scholarship, and more.

Our awards recognize extraordinary contributions to the academic study and public understanding of religion.

From 2025 President Leela Prasad’s Presidential Address “Freedom & Vigilance: Four Meditations”

In the year since I called on our AAR community to examine the conditions of freedom and unfreedom, the world has recorded slaughter and starvation, silencing and surveillance. As despotism and democracy collide on an invisible, ever-moving edge, old wounds left untended have reopened beside new ones. In the days ahead here, many of us will gather to discuss the seismic shifts within our own institutions, shifts that have dictated terms of speaking and terms of silence. These shifts also mirror the changing meanings of education, and of society itself. An atmosphere of inscrutability, repercussion, and betrayal is familiar on many campuses. It is indeed difficult to imagine freedom amid such conditions.

With this idea of vigilance as a special kind of interiority that calls for certain embodied orientations, I turn to poets and storytellers, everyday activists and other visionaries, whose actions exemplify a practice of vigilance more sovereign and sustaining than the brute vigilantism of the state, its sympathizers, and other oppressive structures. What does it mean to be vigilant for justice, for connection, vigilant for the smallest acts of dignity, vigilant for freedom in the ordinary and the everyday? What hope does an ethics of vigilance offer?

I invite you to four meditations across time, space, culture, media, and species. Each meditation, I hope, will illustrate a distinctive practice of vigilance.

LOOKING AHEAD

2026 PRESIDENTIAL THEME: FUTURE/S LAUREL SCHNEIDER

This is not a time for “business as usual.” The future of religious scholarship within and without the academy is more uncertain than ever for our members – perhaps especially our contingent faculty, our graduate students, our department chairs striving to maintain a place for the study of religion, and all who are crafting para-academic careers. From an organizational perspective, our gatherings are powerful opportunities for collective re-imagining and action. From a scholarly perspective, our diverse traditions and approaches make us particularly skilled in thinking about future possibilities.

“The future” is a contested idea that looms large in human traditions and functions diversely in the collective stories of many cultures. To whom something called “the future” belongs, or for whom it functions is a matter of extensive theoretical, literary, and cinematic interest but visions of possible futures (hoped-for or feared) are also an ancient and enduring concern of many religions. Some would say that we bring into being what we can first imagine. Are we able critically to assess and help to build futures for which we hope? The muscle of dystopic imagination is well honed these days, and for good reason. But what about other possible futures, past and present? Where is the sensory richness that might en flesh imagination otherwise?

Scholars of religion are uniquely positioned to reflect critically on the modes and capacities of religious and spiritual stories and practices, ancient and new, local and global, to imagine futures beyond despair on the one hand, or superficial hope on the other. We know how to take seriously the narratives, traditions, and practices that have opened up or delimited our horizons of possibility. We know how to illuminate their materialization over time, and to lift up counter-memory possibilities therein. Given the present intensity of uncertainty facing scholars of religion and academic pursuits in the humanities more generally – not to mention the uncertainties of democracy, peace, and the well-being of the earth and its creatures – this is a time to attend to the question: what is the importance of future thinking (futuring, as some would have it) in the work of religious scholarship in this time?
